Null Device are 'Suspending Belief' on Nilaihah

Madison, WI -based electronic band Null Device is releasing their fourth full-length album "Suspending Belief" June 22nd on Nilaihah Records, to coincide with their first US tour. Building on their previous works, the new album continues to fuse contemporary club music styles with traditional elements from the Middle East and India. An they take that quite literally. According to the band's press release "Suspending Belief" combines 'the most inspired bits of Bollywood filmi, Panjabi bhangra, Arabic classical poetry, trance, house, dubstep, and breakbeat with strong vocals and compelling pop hooks'.

The album will not only be available from many retail and mail-order outlets, but also in multiple DRM-free digital formats, with a 'name your price' option, allowing consumers maximum flexibility and choice. Kicking off in Madison on June 25th of June, Null Device will be hitting the road with power-pop quartet The Dark Clan on the "Fading Belief" tour in support of both "Suspending Belief" and TDC's new double album "Fade/Dance Magic Dance". --More info at <http://nulldevice.bandcamp.com> and www.nulldevice.com.

Null Device: Suspending Belief (Nilaihah Records)

Rich Albertoni - 05/13/2010

"Since forming in 1997, Null Device has bridged production and live instrumentation to show there's more to electronic music than beats per minute.

The fourth album by this Madison act is mostly a collection of down-tempo house and trance that's perfect for chilling out. Led by Eric Oehler, he of the self-declared "studio geekery," the band's members continue to integrate world music influences, as they did on their 2007 release, Excursions.

The Arabic lyrics sung by Raya Wolfsun on "Blades of Grass" are shrouded in the mystery of tribal beats and synth drones. "Teapot Orbiting" has a strong orchestral flavor. The rising strings are a reminder that Oehler is a classically trained violinist.

The album's last two songs show that Null Device has a poppier side, too. The steady beats and accessible synth of "Blow My Mind" are the band's surest path to radio airplay.

I've yet to hear a local disc this year that matches the sonic diversity, musical depth and substance of Suspending Belief. It's one of my early favorites of 2010."
